History of the Kebab on your plate

Ibn Battuta, the famous Moroccan traveller has mentioned that Kebab was an integral part of the daily diet of Indian royalty as early as 1200 AD. The Afghan invaders brought it to the Indian kitchens long before the Mughals. If the pre-Mughal Kebab was more about marinade and meat-being more of rustic chewy chunks, char-grilled in open ovens, with the Mughals it evolved into a delicacy, that was soft and succulent, made richer with aromatic spices and dry fruits.

Some say that the Kebab actually originated in Turkey when soldiers grilled chunks of raw meat on swords in the battlefield. Whether or not that is true, they were first served somewhere in the Middle East. The word Kebab is derived from an Arabic word 'Cabob' which means to burn or char. They are one of the most popular grills around the world.

In India, the Kebab has been a symbol of opulence. Most of the famous Kebabs like Galouti, Shami and Kakori have all originated in the Royal kitchens. Traditionally served in the Moghul courts, today they have transformed into a common street food. They are made with minced meat and mild spices, with lamb being the original choice of meat used, today it has been localized to include beef, goat, chicken and other meat varieties.

Interestingly, Kebab in the Indian context is not just about meats. In fact some delectable vegetarian variations like Hara Bhara Kebab, Paneer Tikka and Dahi Ke Kebab owe their origin to India. The smokey, char-grilled aroma and melt-in-mouth texture can easily get you hooked.

We at Kebabiya have painstakingly revived some of the old recipes and lovingly created some new. Hope you will enjoy them as much as we have enjoyed creating them.

Bon Appetit!
